

Rachel Power joins canalys.com

Canalys.com recruits to provide continuous vendor support to its customers

For immediate release:

Monday 27th March 2000 – Canalys.com announced today that Rachel Power has joined the organization as a Research Analyst.

Sandy Fitzpatrick, senior analyst at canalys.com said, "We are delighted Rachel has joined canalys.com. She will provide us with the perfect resource to support our e-business customers."

Rachel's role will be to ensure that canalys.com remains at the forefront of European e-business developments. In addition, as well as maintaining references and sources of information for our clients on the canalys.com web site, she will also provide direct support to the customers of canalys.com.

Rachel said on agreeing to take on the position "I am looking forward to the challenge of joining a fast growing dotcom company, the 24x7x365 working lifestyle and the fun atmosphere."

Prior to joining canalys.com, Rachel, a recent graduate, worked at JBA. Her principal activities had been to analyse competitive strategies in the enterprise resource planning software industry. Rachel has an avid interest in the European IT and e-business industries. She holds a degree in European studies and German from the University of the East Anglia, Norwich, and is fluent in German and has proficiency in French.

Canalys.com's mission is to become established as the leading strategic analysis company in all e-issues. As well as covering e-business, canalys.com covers all issues relating to the routes-to-market and distribution channels for IT and telecom products.
